

Call for Graduate Research Assistants

The Center for Educational Partnerships (TCEP) at Old Dominion University is currently seeking master's and doctoral level Graduate Research Assistants for the 2022-2023 academic year.

TCEP Graduate Research Assistants participate in a variety of sponsored and funded educational research and program evaluation projects conducted by faculty and administrators within the Center and with external partners.

Candidates for TCEP GRA positions should have foundational skills in qualitative and/or quantitative analysis and strong writing skills.

We are seeking candidates that possess and/or are seeking to establish experience in the following areas:

- Research and program evaluation design
- Research instrumentation, both qualitative and quantitative
- Review of the literature
- Data management (cleaning, screening, restructuring, etc.)
- Quantitative data analysis
- Qualitative data analysis
- Identifying funding opportunities and preparing grant proposals
- Technical and academic writing
- Distribution of research findings through conferences and publications

In addition to tuition coverage, TCEP GRAs receive a competitive stipend and dedicated workspace in our Center.

We are located in the Monarch Village, with convenient access to parking, dining and other amenities along Monarch Way.

For consideration, please send CV and letter of interest to Dr. Shanan Chappell Moots at schappel@odu.edu.

About the Center:

The Center for Educational Partnerships establishes collaborative educational enterprises with schools, school divisions, and higher education institutions that support dissemination of proven practices, rigorous field trials of promising models, and development and testing of innovative research-based models in collaboration with Old Dominion University's primary educational partners. Special emphasis is placed on partnership arrangements that seek to improve the education of individuals from historically underserved populations.
