Faculty Senate Issue Log Form

Date-Submitted: 6 April 2023
Title-of-Issue: A Faculty Developer of an Online Asynchronous Course has the First Right of Refusal to teach the Online Course each Semester
Description: If a Department Chair and/or Program Director plans to offer an asynchronous course in a specific semester, the faculty member who developed the asynchronous course has the first right of refusal to teach the online course that semester. If the faculty developer declines to teach the online course in a specific semester, the Chair and/or Program Director can assign other instructors to teach and use the materials developed for the asynchronous course for that semester.
Rationale: Giving the faculty developer of an asynchronous online course the first right of refusal to teach the online course in a specific semester will not only ensure that students are learning the materials from the expert and originator of the course content but will prevent situations where Department Chairs and/or Program Directors are asking faculty experts to develop asynchronous online courses to be delivered by other instructors.
